Keynote Speaker:
Julie Snow, FAIA
Founding Principal, Snow Kreilich Architects, Inc.

Julie Snow is the founding principal of Snow Kreilich Architects, a studio-based practice in Minneapolis. The studio’s interest in pragmatic and critical programmatic reflection results in innovative designs that expand our understanding of architectural performance. Design strategies engage issues of how architecture performs within each project’s social, cultural and economic context.

The practice has been recognized with numerous awards including the AIA Honor Award, Progressive Architecture Design Award, the Chicago Athenaeum’s American and International Architecture Awards, Architect Magazine Annual Design Review, the Design Distinction Award from I.D. magazine and several US General Services Administration’s Design Excellence Awards. In 2005, Princeton Architectural Press published the first monograph on the studio’s work in its series on emerging designers from around the world.

Julie Snow has held several visiting professor positions including the Graduate School of Design at Harvard, USC, and Washington University, St. Louis, as well as teaching at the University of Minnesota College of Architecture and Landscape Architecture where she received the Ralph Rapson Award for Distinguished Teaching. She was selected as an “Emerging Voice” by the New York Architectural League in 1998. In 2011 she was awarded the Architecture Prize from the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Recently, Snow Kreilich Architects has received publicity for its design of CHS Field in the Lowertown Neighborhood in Saint Paul, which is home to the St. Paul Saints.
